

Online games

At Cedar Point, we believe that learning how to manage finances should start at a young age. Here are some online games for learners of all ages. Game summaries may have been edited for length.

Elementary School

Wise Pockets

Wise Pockets is an interactive money game targeted at kids, parents, and teachers. It covers the essential topics of income, spending, saving, and credit.

The U.S. Mint website

The U.S. Mint website offers several educational games, including Counting with Coins This website has 18 games for kids of varying ages to teach financial literacy skills. Below are a few of the games they offer.

Counting with Coins

The goal is to teach kids about effective money management. This game takes place in a grocery store. Players must do some quick addition and subtraction to determine the cost of groceries.

Making Change

This game focuses on why U.S. currency looks the way it does. Players will learn all about coin shapes, materials used to make coins — including copper and gold -- the faces on coins, and more.

Milos Money Game

Milo's Money is a free resource that helps introduce key money concepts to children aged 5-7.

People's Pie

People's Pie is a balancing act! Players must fund important programs without setting tax rates too high or borrowing too much money. To succeed, they must keep their residents happy and avoid a burdensome national debt.

Middle School and Older

Payback

Say goodbye to student loans -- virtually, at least. Payback encourages college hopefuls to think about student loan debt. It's possible to earn a degree without taking on excessive amounts of student debt. This game will show you how. The game is offered in English and Spanish.

Spent

Can you meet financial obligations on a low income? Spent challenges players to understand the difficult decisions that families face when living paycheck to paycheck. Players will learn about making financial sacrifices when it comes to needs versus wants.

Financial Football

Financial Football is a fast-paced, interactive game that engages players while teaching them personal finance skills.

Hit the Road

This interactive game focuses on spending and saving. Players will go on a virtual cross-country road trip and make decisions about how to manage their money. Create a budget, spend responsibly, and manage debt.

The Uber Game

Can you survive the gig economy? The Uber Game lets players take on the role of a full-time Uber driver with two kids. Created by the Financial Times, this game challenges students to successfully pay their mortgage in a gig economy.
